

BY BETSY STORM FOOD FORETHOUGHT

Egad, we've been invaded by the British!

One of the most democratic aspects of American food is that, like our country itself, there's room for all nationalities. We're fond of French cuisine, mad for Mexican, taken with Thai. Nor have we forgotten our British heritage; many a local pantry makes space for teas, jams, cheeses, candies and other prepared goodies from Great Britain.

The terribly civilized British ritual of indulging in high tea has taken off here. That success, coupled with the government's jolly good effort to promote native fare, is resulting in a renewed interest in British foods.

That doesn't mean Chicagoans are rushing to dine out at British restaurants. Good English food usually emanates from the home kitchen, anyway. (There are few outstanding English restaurants in America, but one of the best is in Chicago: the handsome and sumptuous Cafe Royal.) "The Brits aren't big on eating out," agrees Tony Matthews, an English transplant who runs the trade group known as Food From Britain out of his home in Marietta, Ga. "The weather in England isn't conducive to dining out frequently, and besides, the Englishman eats so very well in his own home."

Matthews's quest encourages Americans to add British flair to their home cooking, and his research indicates that British food imports into the States are up 30 percent since 1984, when Food From Britain began. In 1987, 29 promotions were orchestrated in more than 1,200 American retail outlets including Marshall Field's, Dominick's, Treasure Island and The Chalet liquor stores.

Marshall Field's recently finished its third British promotion. This year, a performance by the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards, a marching band, kicked off the event at the Old Orchard store in Skokie. "We've really got a feeling for this now," enthuses Deborah Newsam, divisional merchandise manager for the store, "and so do many of our customers." At the downtown store, the Walnut Room served a traditional English tea during the promotion.

At Dominick's, tastings of British cheeses tackle the essential goal of

Sarah Hoskins

Alexandra Everist serves a bit of Britain at her Libertyville tea shop.

educating the American palate about the finer points of British cheeses. "We do a great job with Stilton, huntsman and Cotswold, in particular," says Margaret Di Matteo, deli/cheese manager for the Dominick's chain. (See glossary below for descriptions of these and other British specialties.)

It's possible to get a taste of traditional English fare at Libertyville's Oliver Twist Tea Shoppe (299 Peterson Road, Peterson Commons shopping center). Owner Alexandra Everist opened her own little bit of Britain more than two years ago, and her menu is authentic down to the steak and kidney pie that's a favorite repast of the true Brit. As a forerunner to the restaurant, the native Englishwoman ran an imported food business out of her Libertyville home. Anglophiles sought her out for Robertson's black currant jam and Golden Shred orange marmalade, Bisto brown gravy mix ("Brits swear by it") and other coveted British delicacies that are hard to find on this side of the Atlantic.

A burgeoning interest in these products, coupled with Everist's experience in British hotel kitchens and food concessions at local renaissance fairs, convinced her that an authentic tea shop would flourish. "There's a large British population in this area," she explains, "especially around Libertyville, Barrington and Lake Forest."

Everist often "Americanizes" her offerings to suit American tastes. She uses a spicier sausage in some dishes, for example, than would be preferred in England.

Customers who come for breakfast, lunch, high tea or dinner often add to their quite reasonable bill by choosing from a variety of take-out items, including Scotch eggs (hard-boiled eggs surrounded with pork sausage, breaded and then deep-fried) and Everist's best-selling item, Cornish pasties (flaky pastries stuffed with ground beef, fresh vegetables and mushrooms). More than 100 food and gift items are for sale, including auto-

*Some Brit favorites:
Cornish pasties,
Ty-phoo tea and Bisto gravy mix*

graphed books by Cedric Dickens, great-grandson of Charles, who writes about British food and drink.

As one would expect, high tea is a high point at Oliver Twist. Served from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2 p.m. to 3 p.m. on Sunday, high tea includes Ty-Phoo, a popular British tea, a selection of finger sandwiches including cucumber and salmon, an array of fresh fruit and English cheeses, and scones served with Devon cream and jam. The $7.00 tab includes unspoken permission to while away the afternoon: "Many of our women customers spend long afternoons chatting with friends," says Everist. "I've been told my high tea is better than what's served at the Drake or Ritz-Carlton hotels downtown."

To put a bit of Britain's and Scotland's best fare on your own serving table, seek out some of these high-quality goodies:

Baxters Soups: Made with wild game and produce from Scotland's Spey Valley, these specialty soups are made in small quantities and taste-tested by the producers to guarantee high quality. Look for onion, minestrone, lobster bisque and Scotch salmon bisque.

Blair Atholl Scottish Oatmeal: Gives new meaning to the words "hot cereal."

Blue Stilton cheese: This most-loved of British cheeses is a crumbly cheddar with distinctive blue veining. Cured for six months, it's slightly salty, a little dry and wonderful with port wine.

Double Gloucester cheese: Golden in color, it's a smooth, seasoned cheddar, good in sandwiches or served with fresh fruit.

Huntsman cheese: A mixture of three layers of Stilton and four layers of double Gloucester.

Tiptree Preserves: Exceptional preserves—the orange marmalade, for example, is made from fresh Spanish Seville oranges instead of canned or frozen pulp.

Twining's Tea: Find your favorite among the Earl Grey, English breakfast, orange pekoe, or other teas.

Walkers Scottish Shortbread: Each piece is made individually with the best sugar, flour and butter available.

The list goes on...but the space here doesn't. For more on British food and recipes, look for "The Taste of Britain" by Marc and Kim Millon or Time-Life Books' "The Cooking of The British Isles."

301 East Main Street
Barrington, Illinois 60010
312/381-9526

Kitchens designed uniquely for you.

*Certified Kitchen Designer: James R. Walker
Associate Kitchen Designer: Meredith A. Carlson
Associate Kitchen Designer: David L. Erickson
Associate Kitchen Designer: Connie L. Pfister*

SHOWROOM HOURS:

9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday
9:00 a.m. to Noon Saturday
Evenings by Appointment
381-9526

Member, National Kitchen & Bath Association